The first Panel, an observational study using perspective, light, and darkness to depict hope amid challenges, symbolizes today's extremes. The second illustrates interconnectedness through engraved patterns and emphasizes mutual reliance. The third suggests essential support for big dreams, demonstrated by the blue patterned dress supporting a dancer. In the final Panel, red patterns suggest distractions and reflect societal challenges.

A self-portrait. Creativity. Science. Public issues. And Community (Service). The green wheels and clocks represent science and stem that leads to sustainability and alleviates other matters. The red and yellow - 2 of the 3 primary colors - represent the creativity engraved in me. The two coupled together is something I truly live by - connecting people through creativity and seeing how my community changes from my efforts.

As future architects, we need to build systems in our society that maximize sustainability. As such, the structural concept I've drawn shows the futuristic expectations architects will face by putting the structure in a futuristic environment. Additionally, the top of the design, which looks telegraphic, suggests the bridge for the need for advancement in innovative technology and for them to be included in our systems soon.

(Rendered in Environment) Deriving three-dimensional form from my selection of two-dimensional works. Using the pattern on my 2-dimensional works, I sketched a few possibilities for a three-dimensional variation. With the common theme of hope, I wanted to create something seemingly intimidating - whether that'd be seen through the environment-to-structure ratio - or from standing inside the structure facing large, tall surroundings.

Interconnection: Hope

Nylon + Wire + Cardboard + LED lights

19.75" x 47.25" x 23.75"

2023

Hope bridges my societies series with my Interconnection series. It shows the pattern embedded in Society, continuing to illustrate the importance of support in present-day Society and our everyday lives. Additionally, the integration of two materials in one work - the 2 layers of fishnets on the outside supported by wires and the cardboard on the inside - bridging into interconnection.

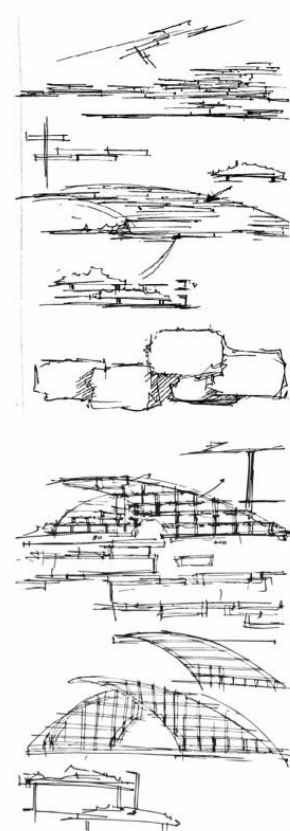

Interconnection: Modern Complexities

Cardboard, Straw, Sticks, LED lights, Tape

24.8" x 20" x 18"

2023

This piece builds on the interconnection series with a modern twist inspired by modern contrast architecture. The artwork symbolizes the unity and contrast between organized linear facets and scattered elements, reflecting intricate societal relationships. The addition of a curvilinear circle represents adaptability in living organisms, highlighting the responsive nature of our community to environmental changes.

Passion: The Corner

This is an observational. This basket of paint left in the corner of my room was just a regular basket that carried my extracurricular supplies; however, that changed when quarantine hit. When I found my passion for art. This basket is one that I now reach for every day: for my recreational hobby, for teaching purposes, and for school - one that I will remember forever.

Passion Triptych

Acrylic; Charcoal; Chalk Pastels

1: Speak With Art | 15.75" x 19.75"

2: Imagination | 18" x 30.75"

3: Courage | 22" x 28"

In the first panel, the eagle represents who I am. The suit symbolizes professionalism in leading international non-profits to the speaker's unstoppable passion for art. The second panel portrays a human face, with a tree telling strength and birds and fishes representing harvest and freedom – things humans seek. The final panel reflects on society, showing an eagle symbolizing individuals overcoming challenges with courage.

This is an observational piece. I couldn't forget to draw during my trip to Victoria to take my 4-hour SAT exam. I walked past this alleyway. The contrast between the antique building in front and the modern building in the back spoke to me. I used leftover espresso presses from late-night studying as the primary material for this piece, keeping it sustainable and showing how our lives might look if we don't.
